CHAPLAIN'S CHAT

Children need to be and feel SAFE. Unfortunately, in our world today there are many places where the safety of children is a real concern. One of these places is the Internet and parents need to be aware of the real dangers associated with children going online and using the internet.

Six Reasons Why the Internet Can Be Dangerous for Children and Teens

1. False Identities Are Easy to Create. Making new friends online is easy and convenient, but it is much different than doing so in person. Why? Because you can't see who is at the other end of the computer. The internet makes it easy for someone to be anyone else in the world. For example, if your child is using social networking websites online, they have to enter in their age. They could easily lie themselves or they could be talking to someone else who is.

2. Internet Predators. As it was previously stated, the internet makes it easy to create a new, false identity. Often times, the individuals who lie about their ages are internet predators. They are the ones who target children, like yours. Unfortunately, many children, teenagers, and their parents cannot tell an internet predator until it is too late, like when the predators try to approach your child or contact them in person.

3. So Many Websites To Choose From. What is nice about the internet is that you have so many websites to choose from. In fact, that is why it is a good way to research school projects. With that said, having so many websites to choose from can be dangerous. Your child can gain access to social networking websites, adult chat rooms, pornographic websites, and websites that are violent in nature.

The other 3 will be discussed in Week 10's newsletter.
